Redwith, LLC. (“Redwith”, “The Company”) is a technology company that specializes in real estate software solutions. The Company works with upstream voice providers and has access to a service provider tool set, but it does not resell any voice communications services at this time. In accordance with FCC regulations, a robocall mitigation plan is outlined below.

Robocall Mitigation Plan Summary

The Company will use the following practices to help mitigate illegal robocalls:

- 1. Limited Scope of Provider Services

The Company does not provide voice service to customers. All voice communications that originate on The Company’s systems come directly from owners, employees, agents, and appropriate business partners.

- 2. Restrictions on the Use of Auto-dialers

The Company does not allow automatic dialing mechanisms for outbound calling. This restriction includes legal forms of robocalling.

- 3. Technical Best Practices

The Company will make reasonable efforts to keep its systems updated with the latest software updates and security practices.

- 4. Cooperation with Government Agencies

The Company will cooperate fully with the FCC and law enforcement agencies in regard to inquiries about illegal activity. Traceback data will be provided manually in cooperation with The Company’s upstream voice provider.

- 5. Use of Compliant Upstream Providers

The Company only uses an upstream voice provider that is fully-compliant and registered with the Robocall Mitigation Database.

- 6. Commitment to Investigative Diligence

The Company is committed to internally investigating all abnormal system behavior relating to unauthorized usage, including but not limited to robocalling.

Conclusion

Redwith is committed to the mitigation of illegal robocall activity. Although not directly involved in the resale of voice communication services, Redwith will continue to comply with FCC regulations and industry best practices to ensure that illegal robocalls do not originate from within its systems.
