

Hello whoever you are,

PhoneJanitor.com provides individual users with a filterable phone number, kind of like a Google Voice for your mom. It's literally designed for getting less phone calls.

Anyway, as far as mitigating robocalls, our system has a REST API, and you can only make one call at a time on your phone number, much like your actual phone, because that's what our service is. A virtual phone replacement with outlook-style filters. We were started so people didn't _receive_ robocalls anymore.

If someone happens to circumvent our system somehow and abuse our Bandwidth.com account, we'll happily help anyone that needs info, but that's unlikely in our minds. If someone had our Bandwidth.com credentials they could abuse Bandwidth's services in whatever ways that's allowed, but our system wouldn't allow the second call while the first is in progress. The database would just be busy and the call tree couldn't happen.

Cheers,
